ASIAN ART in LONDON

ASIAN ART in London (AAL) is now in its 18th year, and this autumn's event runs from 5 to 14 November. The event provides a platform for the promotion, exhibition and sales of Asian and Islamic World art with 52 dealers and galleries from the UK and overseas showcasing a range of works of art from South, Southeast and Central Asia, China, Japan, Korea, the Himalayas and the Islamic World, ranging from antiquity to the contemporary, along with sales of Asian art at the fine art auction houses. Alongside the gallery shows, visitors can attend exhibitions, lectures, gallery talks, study days and conferences, and auctions, which coincide with the Asian Art in London week.

Follow us

THE LATE Night Openings start with Kensington Church Street on 7 November, St James's on 8 November and Mayfair on 9 November, all from 5-9pm. Not all galleries participate in these late night openings, so refer to the AAL booklet or website for individual details. The AAL directory, includes maps and an events calendar and can be found in members' galleries, or can be obtained from the Asian Art in London, tel +44 (0)20 7499 2215, info@asianartinlondon.com.

Alongside gallery shows, there are museum exhibitions and events that coincide with Asian Art in London week. The AAL symposium on The Psychology of a Collector takes place at the Royal Institution in Mayfair on 5 November. There is a study day, Analyzing Indian Textiles, at Morley College in Waterloo on 7 November to coincide with the Fabric of India exhibition at the Victoria and Albert Museum, and panel discussions on New Perspectives on Connoisseurship at Tomasso Brothman in St. James's on 9 November, as well as on East Asian Art: Understanding the Market for Artistic Innovation at Sotheby's Institute of Art on 12 November. The panel discussion Stars in Conversation at the British Museum is on 13 November and is a conversation with artists Qiu Leiwei and Ma Desheng, members of The Stars group who formed China's first avant-garde group, of which Ai Weiwei was also a member. There are several Asian and Islamic World art exhibitions in London's galleries, and more on our website.

anniversary of the opening of the Victoria and Albert Museum's Nehru Gallery, there is an India Festival of exhibitions including The Fabric of India and The Art of Indian Storytelling both on display during AAL week. Leighton House, in Kensington, presents a photographic exhibition by Adel Quraishi, Guardians of the Prophet's Mosque (Al-Masjid al-Nabawi), which runs until 29 November. The Embassy of Japan's exhibition in Piccadilly is entitled, Artists in a Floating World: Edo Woodblock Printing in the 21st Century and runs until early December.

The annual gala party is on 6 November at The Mandarin Oriental Hyde Park, London and marks the 2015 UK - China Year of Cultural Exchange. Tickets cost £60 for this event and must be pre-booked through Asian Art in London, www.asianartinlondon.com.

90 Years is accompanied by a catalogue that not only introduces the collection, but also celebrates the Merchant family being 90 years in business. The cover image is of the Hodgson Rhyton, one of the most important jades Merchant has handled. It was exhibited at the V&A in 1975 in the exhibition Chinese Jade Through the Ages. The exhibition comprises 90 jade pendants, bracelets, rings, seals, bottles and objects for the scholar's desk from the Song to Qing dynasties, mainly from the Qianlong period, many of which are imperial, four of which have imperial reign marks. Another highlight is a water buffalo with a boy seated on its back from the collection of the Marquis and Marquise de Ganay.

To celebrate AAL, Jorge Welsh is

Imperial date ciborium, gong, height 16.2 cm, interior inscribed with a 62-character poem composed by the Qianlong emperor, four-character mark of Qianlong corresponding to 1792, Marchant.

Candelabrum, China, Qing dynasty, Qianlong period (1736-1795), copper decorated with polychrome enamels. 34 x 22 x 31.5 cm, Jorge Welsh

Reclining water buffalo, pale celadon jade, Qianlong period (1736-1795), 13.3 cm long and 8.9 cm high, Marchant.

Enamels on Copper. In a letter from The Hague of 13 August 1728, the British Ambassador, Philip Dörner Stanhope reported Henrietta Howard, Countess of Suffolk (1689-1767), with news of an exciting discovery. Describing a very particular sort of ware, wrought in metal and painted with 'china of all colours', the Earl's account is one of the earliest known records of Chinese painted enamels on copper in the West. This intriguing but little-studied group of objects were developed during the first half of the 18th century, predominately produced in the Qianlong period (1736-1795) and continuing into the 19th century. Made for the export and domestic markets, as well for the imperial courts in Beijing, this type of ware was referred to as 'yang ci' in Chinese – literally 'foreign porcelain' – becoming known as 'Canton enamel' after the main centre of production in China. Produced in a range of forms, these copper objects were coated with an initial layer of white or turquoise enamel and over-decorated with designs in polychrome enamels, some of which are comparable to those found on Chinese porcelain. Catalogue available. Fleursdelys Antiquités is exhibiting their usual offering – Masterpieces in Wood.

LATE NIGHT OPENING MAYFAIR

Monday 9 November

Albermarle Gallery, David Baker Oriental Art, Berwald Oriental Art, Brus Fine Art, Prahlad Bobbar, Eskewen Ltd, One East Asia, Sam Fogg, Francesco Galloway, Kalkodo; Sydney L Moss, Nicholas Pitcher Oriental Art, Ravi and Renu, Gorkey Elena Shchukina, Stephen Ram Books, Vanderveen Oriental Art, Yves Heritage Jewels

The Albermarle Gallery presents an exhibition of Jiang Shan Chun's (b 1979) oil on canvas entitled China's History Teller, inspired by photographs the artist discovered on a trip to his Inner Mongolian hometown of Hobhot dating from the period shortly after the founding of the People's Republic of China until the Opening Up Reforms, resulting in his Poste series and China Dreaming series' catalogue available. David Baker features recent acquisitions of monochrome Chinese ceramics from the Song, Yuan and Qing periods and small bronzes and jades from the Ming and Qing periods, mainly from private collections, including an early 18th-century Chinese jade 'Bo' and 'cub' group from the Lady Horlick collection, whilst Nicholas Pitcher's exhibition on Chinese ceramics and bronzes from the Han to Ming dynasty and later Chinese monochromes includes a Chinese painted grey pottery sleeve dancer from the Han dynasty.

This year Berwald Oriental Art is holding two concurrent exhibitions. The first is Eight Transitional Treasures, which celebrates its 30th anniversary exhibition and shows blue and white Chinese porcelain produced from 1620 to mid-1670s, including a fine Chongzhen period (1628-1644) brush pot uniquely painted with three related scenes and an 'elephant leg' vase painted with Zhong Kui the demon queller illustrating the use of Daoist subjects during this period. Catalogue available. The second exhibition, Out of the Blue, features photographs by the Chinese photographer Zhi Guang Ju. Very few photographers have gained the distinction of becoming a Fellow of the Royal Photographic Society, based in Bath, and Mr Ju, who gained his FRPS in 2014, is currently the only one from China. This photographic show is a response to the exceptionally vivid work of the Transitional Period (1630-1680) painters on porcelain in Jingdezhen in China, with their use of highly refined cobalt-blue combined with outstanding skill in painting.

Ji, whose work can be characterised as 'abstracted nature', uses his camera like a painting brush, with tilts, sweeps and zooms, all within a single exposure. The technique is much influenced by the 6th-century Chinese art critic Xie He, who formulated the 'six principles of Chinese painting'. The most first and most important of these – indeed the guiding principle of Chinese art – is qiyan shengyong, translatable as 'spirit resonance, living movement'. Using his technique of moving the camera like a brush, Ji has employed this ancient principle in a 21st-century context, producing striking images, remarkable for their energy and representing a dramatic fusion between Eastern and Western approaches.

Prahlad Bobbar's exhibition, Pigment, Form and Light: The Arts of India 1550-1900, displays a selection of fine classical Indian paintings including Mughal, Rajput and Company, court objects and early photographs of India by Captain Linnaeus Tripe (the Tripe exhibition at the V&A ends on 11 October) and Dr John Murray. Highlights include a 17th-century imperial Mughal portrait of the poet Jami, made for the Emperor Jahangir by Keshav Das, Vision of an Elephant Hunt by Mir Kalan Khan of the Indo-Islamic court of Lucknow and a folio from the Fraser album depicting an Afghan couple with a child painted for the British Resident in Delhi.

Vision of an Elephant Hunt, attributed to Mir Kalan Khan, Lucknow, circa 1760, opaque watercolour and gold on paper, 21.5 x 11.2 cm, Prahlad Bobbar

Gallery Elena Shchukina is participating in AAI for the first time with an exhibition entitled Impermanence: The Art of Microbiology. Impermanence, the idea that all matter collapses, resonates through the work of Korean contemporary artist Seung-Hwan Oh. Elements of microbiology have been incorporated into Seung-Hwan Oh's photographic portraits which are distorted by their meeting with bacteria which erodes the surface. The photograph is destroyed creating a disparity between what is still visible and what is lost as in Mickey Mouse.

Eskewen Ltd is exhibiting 10 new paintings by the contemporary ink master, Lin Dan (b 1953), Transposed Echoes: Recent Paintings by Lin Dan alongside Raphael's drawing of Saint Benedict receiving Maurus and Placidus. Lin Dan is renowned for his pioneering ink paintings of abstract landscape compositions and scholars' rocks. The 10 recent works on show represent a new direction for the artist, influenced by Renaissance drawings. The Raphael drawing on display inspired Lin Dan's large-scale highlight, Redefining Pleats of Matter. Catalogue available.

Sam Fogg is concentrating on store this year in the exhibition Jahā: Stone Screens from Mughal India. This year, Francesco Galloway is holding two exhibitions Asian Textiles: 500 Years and Indian Graphic Art from The Paul Walter Collection, one of the most significant collectors of Indian art. Highlights include a group of imperious Indian deities, Ottoman wools and embroidered textiles, and Begumtai textile scrolls. Catalogue include a rare book by Mahara Kamechowla Singh Banda made one of French Art Deco silk and a lavishly embroidered lady's robe from Ottoman Turkey.

The Silent Season: Images of Winter in Chinese and Japanese Paintings is the title of New-York based gallery Kalkodo with the influence and knowledge that winter is coming and the silent season is almost here. These emotions are forever with us in Western literature in 'woods lovely dark and deep' and in the East where a rush-cloaked fisherman in a lone skiff plies a river thick with cold through the poetry of the masters. With these thoughts, Kalkodo is presenting a selection of Chinese and Japanese paintings that embody winter's spirit capturing its beauty.

Ink Nude 4 (1987) by Ma Desheng, ink on Chinese paper, 68 x 127 cm, Rani & Rani

along with its bleakness. In one painting, a reconciliation between beauty and brutality is achieved by Chikuto in a painting of a hawk on a wintry branch; the image of the hawk conveying nobility of spirit within the majesty of an unforgiving, frigid world. This year Sydney L Moss gallery have turned their attention to Japanese art in the exhibition Bowing Cleave, Iroto and Suzuribako of Rare Beauty.

Singapore-based One East Asia's

Contemporary Art in Southeast Asia that highlights works by contemporary Southeast Asian artists. Rossi & Rossi are presenting works by one of China's most distinguished artists, Ma Desheng (whose work is also on show at the British Museum) at their new gallery at 27 Dover Street.

Ma was a founding member of the avant-garde Xingjing (Stain) Group that mounted exhibitions after the cultural revolution which included artists Huang Rui, Wang Keping, Qiu Jian, and Xu Weiwei. (See article on page 12-13 of this issue.) A selection of his boldly graphic, monochromatic woodblock prints from the late 1970s to 1980s, as well as serious ink paintings from the late 1980s are on show, as well as a few works from his large series of paintings of rocks from 2007-2012.

The Netherlands-based ceramics dealers, Vanderven Oriental Art, are exhibiting recent acquisitions of Chinese enamel on biscuit porcelains alongside Chinese pottery figures. Catalogue available.

LATE NIGHT OPENING ST JAMES'S

20 London Gallery Shows

Maribers (2013) by Gao Xingjian, ink on paper, 84 x 110 cm, Atik's Gallery

Nude at Leisure (2008) by Phung Pham (b. 1934), lacquer on wood, Vietnam, Raquelle Azran

Illustration to the Shangri Ramayana, The Arrival of Garuda, Book II, Lankakantha, Kulu or Bahu, India, circa 1700-1710, opaque pigment on paper, Rob Desai

Rob Desai showcases Indian Paintings from Miniature to Modern, a selection of classical Indian paintings including Pahari miniature paintings from the courts of Jammu, Mandi, Kangra and Guler. The highlight is an early 18th-century Kulu, or Bahu, painting from the Shangri Ramayana, one of the most important narrative series of paintings from the Punjab Hills, entitled, The Arrival of Garuda. As a counterpoint to these classical paintings is a group of early works on paper by the modernist master, Francis Newton Souza. Completed in the late 1940s and early 1950s, they represent some of the earliest examples of the artist's work rendered in Expressionistic, Fauvist and Modern styles, revealing how Souza experimented in this early period of his career to create his own unique visual vocabulary.

Malcolm Fairley's exhibition, entitled Works of Art of the Meiji Period, comprises Japanese metalwork, cloisonné and lacquerware that includes a 19th-century pair of Imperial Presentation cloisonné vases by Ando Jubei. Another exhibitor showing Japanese art is Grace Tseng with works of art of the Meiji, Taisho and early Showa periods that feature lacquer, metalwork, cloisonné and iron, including a fine lacquer painting of a thatched farmhouse by Shibusaw Zeshin (1807-1893), the master lacquerer and painter of late Edo to Meiji period.

Oliver Forge and Brendan Lynch present Indian and Islamic works of art, including 17th- to 19th-century Indian miniature paintings, a fragmentary 11th-century Pala stela depicting a now headless standing Buddha from Bengal, or Bihar, a group of works of art from Ceylon, including a rare palm-leaf fan with ivory handle and finial, a casket with silver-gilt mounts and a bronze figure of Buddha, all dated to around 1800.

Returning to AAL is Nicholas Grindley, who is exhibiting a group of photographs depicting early images of China, mainly by Western photographers such as Thomas Child (1841-1898) and his albumen print, part of the series, Views of Peking and its Vicinity. This has been printed in the oval shape and depicts the Pail Chaung Temple, signed and dated 1875.

Christophe Hoox is once again showing the gallery's strengths, the Arts of India, Himalayas and Vietnam. A highlight of the exhibition is a bronze figure of the Hindu god Vishnu from Southern India, Vijayanagara period, 16th to 17th centuries, from a private collection in France.

At Hanga Ten, contemporary artist Sarah Brayer's work is on show in Luminosity Meet the Artist. Brayer uses new ways of expressing the Japanese tradition of maki-e and is renowned for her large-scale, poured washi paperworks and aquatint prints. Based in Japan, she describes her work as painting with liquid paper as her technique entails pouring dyed vats of pulp into large screens and manipulating the movements of the slowly draining water to create a pictorial effect.

Ben Janssen presents an exhibition of Chinese metalwork comprising bronze vessels from the Shang dynasty, silver gilt boxes and figures of the Buddha from the Tang to Song dynasties. A new participant to AAL, Kent Antiques showcases fine examples of traditional Islamic art forms, including calligraphy, textiles, ceramics, metalwork and lacquered wares, featuring a rare 16th-century Ottoman velvet panel. Littleton & Hemmey present selected pieces from the Robert H. Blumenthal Collection of Bamboo Carvings, including a large carved bamboo 'Eight Immortals' brush pot, attributed to Gu Jue from the Qing dynasty, Kangxi period. during the Kangxi period as illustrated by the depth and level of detail of this carved brush pot illustrating the 'Eight Daoist Immortals' crossing the sea on a raft to attend the Conference of the Magical Peach.

Simon Pilling is holding his 10th anniversary exhibition this year. He specialises in showcasing artistic developments of Japanese art in the 20th century to the contemporary, especially lacquerware. This exhibition features ceramic, metal, wood and work on paper, in addition to lacquerware, notably a work by contemporary lacquer artist Ando Saeo, who combines the traditions of Vietnamese lacquer painting, son-mai with Japanese lacquer techniques illustrated in his work, Orpiment, whose message is that the gorilla must not suffer extinction.
